Hence it is that salmon trout are most highly prized, and command the highest price in our markets. Articles containing a large proportion of phosphorus are considered the richest "brain food," but in animals this element is chiefly found in the bones, combined with the

The Ashantee War.
 One of the causes of the Ashantee war in 1817, says the Englishman, is thus told: Another of the causes which have been urged about the present state of affairs is the capture of some missionaries, four years ago, by the Ashantees. These warriors had made a raid and met with some resistance from the Aquapimns, who made a stand at a deserted mission-house, by the name of Timp. As no weapons having been used, the Ashantees declared that the former occupants had murdered their enemies, and accordingly sent a large force to the place, to exterminate their camp. These men, dressed in flay, saying they were not fighting men, and had nothing to do with the war, were taken prisoners to the domestic, the Ashantee capital. Mr. Williams, head of the mission, had unfortunately his wife and child with him, and they shared all the sufferings to in Washington county, N. Y., there is a quiet little village recognized for its pretentionally scholastic name of Udbridge. It is a comfortable, sequestered place, in no way more remarkable than many of the other quiet villages of Washington, Rensselaer and adjoining counties. This is the seat of a small, well-sustained district, and its little community school feels very much like the other little communities near-by—fair types of the little towns of the country. In this little town there lived, about one hundred years ago, a man who afterwards became widely known as a principal exponent of the "New England" religious denomination. He may be said to be found in the current biographical dictionaries of the day, but he is not mentioned in the history of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

According to a writer in the Popular Science Monthly, "the rays of light that the direct rays on the sun have free admission into the living beings, because the sun's rays impart health and invigorating quality to air, and stimulate vitality of plants, as they do those of plants, and thus enlighten human beings, and all plants, would seem to dis- respect, therefore, should be south-

CHINESE BEGGARS.

In China, begging is reduced to a system. One class have a head man, a sort of king, raised to his high dignity on account of his superior talents as a manager and extorlor of money. "Whatever the beggars procure by begging," says the writer of a Chinese romance, "they give to the head man, who, in rain or snow, when they cannot follow their calling, the chief provides them with food and supplies them with clothing." He goes round from shop to shop, estimates the wealth and resources of the chief shops in the cities, excepting, it is said, those of tailors and other trades, and goes round to the owners of these shops, and bargain with them till they come to satisfactory terms. He slips of paper, one green and one blue, into the hands of the shopkeeper, on which are set forth the head man's name, the amount of black-mail of Turkey, and the magnificent gates of the city were opened to the passers over her, but not at first giving her the pressing of his hands for her face, as she so abundantly deserved. Then he supported her under her elbows, and the operation went on with incredible rapidity. He pressed her head and neck on the inside, and using his hands the same way, never touching them, until her eyes closed gradually and she was insensible. Then he laid her down. Thus the miracle was accomplished. Oriental books have described this in the same manner, but always with the addition of the aid of the spirits to far-away strangeness of the scene and to be witnessed it. But here it was performed before us, most wonderful and most beautiful, and the spectators felt had evidently lost all sensibility except as emanating from the magic he quickly removed the stool on which he stood, and the patient, supported only by her elbows, was borne off by the attendants. One of these supporters was re-

What a Father Thinks.

Mr. M. D. Leggett, father of the all student who was killed by falling from the roof of the building of the London Star that he is convinced his son's death was entirely accidental and in no way connected with the strike. He says the young man had and received the consent of his father to join the secret society, and that Mortimer was there at the time, in free will, and was with his own friends. In the ceremonies of the funeral night, those students had in the procession, a clear and creditable record. He says that he had and no more expectation of danger to his son than he had. I cannot, therefore, find it to my heart to speculate on the young men nor Council easily."

The image is characterized by a dark, irregular shape near the top, which could be a hole or a piece of tape. The rest of the image shows a grainy, textured surface with varying shades of gray and black.

A Strange Fight.

A Man Fights a Grizzly Bear in the Prison Ring—The Result.

General James S. Drabish gives the following sketch of the exploits of a noted frontiersman. The incident was related to the general by Mr. Beaman, the famous hunter, trapper and guide of the Plains:

In one of the mining camps I became acquainted with a fellow who later I learned was called Bruiser Sam. He was a powerful man, and sometimes drank a good deal, but was always good-tempered and kindhearted. The miners were a hard lot in those days, and most brutal of sports. Prize-fighting was one of their pastimes, and at this Bruiser Sam excelled—no man in the camp being able to stand up long before him. His feats of strength were predigions. Often would he take a barrel of liquor by the chimes, and knocking out the bung, lift it up and shrink from the hole, as easily as if it were a small keg. Then he would stand on a box twelve inches high, and lift one hundred and eighty pounds with his teeth. He could pick up a three-headed bag of four with his mouth and carry it a mile.

One day a saloon keeper offended Sam, and to have revenge he went out into the street, and stood with his work-horse, carried it into the saloon, leaving the enraged barkeeper to get it out and down the steps as best he could. At another time he carried a large rock into the store and dropped it through the door.

"About this time a number of desperadoes arrived at the mine, and gave Sam some trouble, but he finally conquered them all, and the last fellow got licked, he exclaimed:

"Well, if you can lick me, you can't lick a grizzly bear!"

Sam said he could lick a grizzly bear, and that single-handed, alone, he would fight one. There was a grizzly in the camp that had been killed by the miners when a cub, and raised by them.

The bear was now nearly full-grown, and though a great, powerful brute, was quite tame and harmless. It was not long before some wretched men arranged a fight between the dumb beast and Sam.

The day came, and with it a great crowd. The beast was to be chained to a tree by the neck, and Brainer Sam was to fight him for one hour with his naked fists. The bets were three to one on Sam, and many were betting that he would whip the bear. Poor Brainer, a great, shaggy-coated fellow—was tied to a stake by a obstinate twelve feet long, and as good—tempered as a cornered cat, standing on his hind legs and scampering about with delight at the sight ut so many people. Perhaps there was as little of the real beast in Brin, as there was in many of the tamed and animals who came the country round to see him fight.

The keepers of the bear began teasing and poking him with sharp poles and ires, and although he took it quite coolly at first, he, after a while, growled fiercely, and tugged at his chain. Sam now appeared and was received with loud cheers.

Stepping into the ring, Sam prepared for battle, stripping off all his clothing except his boots, pants, and drawers. His broad chest contrasted strangely with the shaggy coat of the beast, as the two combatants stood glaring at each other. The intelligent animal seemed to understand the situation in a moment, and, rising on his hind legs, walked toward Sam, who tried to lift him between the eyes, hoping to break his skull; but, failing in this, he stepped to one side, and giving the side a powerful blow, knocked him down. Cheer after cheer greeted Sam as he stepped from the ring, and the men who bet on the bear really began to fearthey would lose their money.

Five minutes were allowed between the rounds, and the trainers poked the bear vigorously all the time, so that when Sam came up again he was in a towering passion.

The moment Sam crossed the ring

the bear recognized him, and bounded the full length of the chain. So great was the rage of the beast, that the people drew back in horror, and even Sam grew pale. Again the bear leaped forward, and taking his chain in his paws, attempted to break it. For a time it resisted all his effort, but at length he snapped it in twain, and the crowd of frightened people fled terror-stricken away.

The bear dashed upon Sam, who bravely stood his ground, and actually succeeded in felling the beast to the earth, but in doing so lost his balance, and before he could escape the bear caught him with one claw, and lifting him on the face with the other, broke the poor fellow's jaw. Still Sam fought on, with his jaw hanging upon his breast and blood spitting from a dozen wounds. It was terrible, but, of course, the bear won, knocking Sam down and tearing open his chest with his sharp claws.

By this time the people had got guns, and returned to the field, where they fired volley after volley into poor Brinn until he lay quite still; and Sam was dead, too, and they took up his body and the carcass of the bear and buried them both.

And thus ended Bruiser Sam and his grizzly bear fight, which was perhaps the only prize bear fight ever fought in the world.

A New Cereal.

A new cereal has been grown in Oregon, and the people are puzzled as to whether it belongs to the wheat family or more nearly resembles rye, barley, or oats, opinions being very nearly equally divided. From seven to ten stalks grow from one root to a height of about four feet, and these stalks, or straws, are thin and hard. The radicals are tough, and spread widely. The heads are six inches in length, and covered with a heavy beard, each filament being five inches long. The grain is double the length of a kernel of wheat, and instead of being drum and compact, is hollow, the cavity containing glutinous matter. While the grain bears a closer resemblance to wheat than anything else, the straw looks more like that of rye or barley. Its origin is somewhat peculiar, the first grain having been taken from the stomach of a wild goose by a farmer in Tillamook county, nearly three years ago. He was struck with its appearance, and planted it, and the succeeding season sowed the product. It is distributed a portion of the second crop among a few friends in different parts of the State, who this year raised small quantities. It will require another year to determine the value of this grain.
